A CROOK RUN DOWN.

Dr. Waite, the Medicine Fakir, in Custody on the Charge of Forgery and Abduction.

The people of Maysville have not forgotten Dr. A. A. Waite, the oily-tongued medicine man, who, with his band of Indians, spent about six weeks here during the summer of 1886, selling Ka-ton-ka and Modoc Oil and giving lectures and sleight-of-hand performances. Crowds flocked to his tents in Limestone Creek bottom night after night during his stay, and many suffered themselves to be humbugged into buying his patent nostrums. After leaving here he made a tour of the towns in Central and Northeastern Kentucky, and succeeded in gulling the people and coining money wherever he went. Many believed he was a grand rascal, and were confident the truth would finally come out. The wily Waite and his Indians wintered at Lexington last winter, and then along in the spring he "skipped" between two days—"by the light of the moon"—leaving a number of creditors to bewail their loss. Recently he was arrested at Maryville, Tenn., on two serious charges of abduction and forgery, and judging from the following he has probably "reached the end of his rope." The Cincinnati Enquirer, in speaking of the arrest, says:

The prisoner is Dr. A. A. Waite, alias Dr. Stacy, and is wanted by almost every detective agency in the country. The scenes of his crimes are Corry, Penn., and Lynn, Mass., but he is well known in this city.

He is a large, well-built fellow, with heavy, dark mustache, and wears long, curly hair. His real occupation is that of a medicine fakir, though he can turn his hand to almost anything. About two years ago he turned up in this city with a patent fluid ink-eraser and a corn remedy, which he sold from a little stand on the street corners about town. He was accompanied by a young and prepossessing woman, whom he represented as his wife.

While here the woman was taken grievously ill, and was treated by a Dr. Pierce, whose office was at No. 12 West Ninth street. After she recovered she disappeared suddenly, and Waite left her without her. From subsequent developments it was learned that her home was in Lynn, Mass., where she is well connected, and that Waite abducted her under promise of marriage.

After Waite left Cincinnati nothing was heard from him until about six months ago, when he turned up in Corry, Penn., under the name of Dr. Stacy. He obtained employment with a large patent medicine house there run by one Cal Edwards. Waite engaged to travel through the South introducing the stuff, and as a means of collecting a crowd he gave exhibitions of sleight-of-hand tricks, exposures of Spiritualism and faith cures. About six weeks ago he was called back to Corry, Penn., and remained there about one week making preparations for starting out with a new medicine. While there he forged a check or draft for $3,000 on the firm by whom he was employed, and to make matters even he skipped out with the wife of a hardware merchant there. The couple were seen boarding the train together, and the lady was stopped by her friends, to whom she said she was coming to Cincinnati to see some friends. Since then this statement has been found to be untrue, and it is believed that she eloped with the fakir. Waite's description was sent to the detective agencies throughout the country when the Lynn, Mass., chapter of the case was learned. Waite has had hold of the case for about one month, and Thursday he received word of Waite's arrest at Maryville, Penn., by Captain Overton.

From all accounts he is a clever crook. He can pass as an evangelist, physician, showman or lecturer, and can take almost any part in the drama of deception. He can pick almost any lock in the country, and has even been known to get up in the pulpit in some of the churches in the smaller Southern towns and preach a sermon that would bring tears to the eyes of his congregation. An hour later, if he found the right sort of people, he was at a gaming table fleecing suckers like an old-timer. Waite will be taken back to Pennsylvania, and when they get through with him there the Massachusetts authorities will cultivate his acquaintance.

MR. GREEN ACQUITTED.

Judge Walton Decides that the Shooting of Baldwin Was Done in Self-Defense.

The examining trial of Thomas M. Green in the City Court at Lexington ended Saturday evening last, about four o'clock. The arguments were commenced Friday afternoon, Judge Hunt for the defense and J. H. Beaucamps for prosecution speaking. On Saturday Judge Thornton and Hon. W. H. Wadsworth spoke for defense, and Judge Denny and City Attorney Hutchesin for the prosecution. At the conclusion of the arguments, Judge Matt Walton summed up the testimony briefly, and dismissed the warrant, holding that it was a plain case of self-defense on the part of Mr. Green.

Mr. and Mrs. Green, accompanied by Hon. W. H. Wadsworth, returned home Saturday evening. Mr. Green was met at the Bank of Maysville by a large number of his friends and was given a warm welcome. All were eager to congratulate him on the result of the trial.

In speaking of Mr. Wadsworth's argument the Lexington correspondent of the Commercial-Gazette says: "His speech was about the finest effort ever made in the new court house on behalf of any man charged with such a serious crime. It bristled with sharp and witty points, based on the best of logic and facts, all backed up by Coke and Blackstone."

He paid an eloquent compliment to the public press, and said the glory of the country would cease when crimes and misdemeanors in high places could not be exposed by the pen. He could see nothing for the court to do but dismiss the defendant as all law pointed to but one finding, that of self-defense."

 The Flemingsburg Times-Democrat says: "Although last Monday was a very cold day, it was not quite cold enough for our friend Hechinger to get left, at least we judge he did not by the number of customers he had in his room at the Holladay House during the day. The popularity of the clothing that Hechinger & Co. manufacture is clearly shown by the fact that nearly all merchants in our part of the State handle them, and the reputation of the house is such that Mr. Hechinger frequently, during his trips through our county, sells his customers without having a single sample garment with him."
